Disclosure of Confidential Information

In certain circumstances, ALPCAPS may be required to disclose confidential information related to its clients, including personal, financial, and other sensitive data ("Personal Data"). This may be necessary for compliance with applicable laws, regulations, or contractual obligations, or to protect the legitimate interests of ALPCAPS or the client.

The following scenarios may necessitate such disclosure:

Legal or Regulatory Action: If required by law or regulatory authorities, ALPCAPS may disclose Personal Data to ensure compliance with any legal or regulatory proceedings.

Enforcement of Claims: In cases where ALPCAPS needs to secure claims or enforce collateral, it may disclose relevant information to support legal or financial actions.

Debt Recovery: If debt recovery actions are taken, ALPCAPS may disclose Personal Data as necessary for proceedings related to debt collection or recovery efforts.

Public Allegations: Should a client make public allegations against ALPCAPS or report such allegations to regulatory authorities, the necessary information may be disclosed to protect the company's interests.

Cross-Border Transactions: ALPCAPS may disclose Personal Data for cross-border payments or financial transactions. This includes sharing client details, such as name, address, and account information, with correspondent banks, payment systems, and beneficiaries involved in the transaction.

Financial Instrument Transactions: If a client engages in transactions involving financial instruments governed by market rules, ALPCAPS may disclose relevant data to third parties, including market authorities, to ensure the transaction is executed according to applicable rules and regulations.

Corporate Actions: Personal Data may be disclosed in connection with corporate actions or transactions involving securities, including to custodians, banks, and other stakeholders required to execute the operation.
